Experience With Silage.

Some time ago we asked our readers who had actual experience with silage to report that experience for the benefit of those who have had none and who contemplated putting up silos. We ask our readers to study carefully the reports which we publish from week to week.

Our theory has been that the corn belt farmer who is engaged in growing stock cattle or finishing steers for the market, can not afford to be without a silo. He should, in fact, have two, one for winter and one for summer. The letters which we published in our issue of April 21st afford the most complete confirmation of this theory.

We are particularly anxious that our readers should make a careful study of the advantages of the summer silo. There is not a year that we do not have complaints (and only one here and there reports to us) of the falling off of cattle during the dry spell which we usually have from about the middle of July to the first of September. They tell us that their cows are failing in milk, and that the steers are not gaining in weight, and in fact often losing. All this may be avoided by the construction of a summer silo, filling it with corn in the fall of the year, and holding it to meet just these conditions.

Failing in milk or losing in flesh is not the whole loss. Pastures, and especially blue grass pastures, eaten down close during this hot, dry spell, will not yield nearly as much the next year as pastures which the farmer is not tempted to pasture close, because he has other feed just as good if properly balanced. The silo is the best solution of the dairy proposition, of the feeding proposition and of the livestock growing proposition.

Having become satisfied that it will pay you to construct a silo, then take up the question of size and kind to build; and do it soon enough so that you can do it economically and with the maximum of profit.—Wallace's Farmer.

Feeding Grain On Pasture.

Feeding grain to dairy cows on pasture does not pay. At least, that is what the average farmer will tell you. In a way, too, he is right, although not completely so. It is almost the universal experience that it is impossible by feeding grain to increase very largely at the time the milk flow of a cow on good pasture. Some of the experiment stations, however, have found that feeding grain to cows on pasture increased the milk flow considerably. The Kansas station found that this increase amounted to as much as thirty-one per cent, while the New York station determined that each pound of grain fed produced a pound of milk. But even with such favorable results as these, the increased milk flow was not enough to pay for the grain.

Please do not stop reading at this point, saying, "Oh, pshaw! I knew all this before." We want you to consider another point; one that causes many careful dairymen often to feed grain on pasture. Did you know that the milk cow is something like a storehouse. The way that this point has bearing is that grain which apparently produces little or no results in greater milk flow at the time, may do so later. Dairy experimenters have proved that cows fed grain on pasture will generally produce better in the fall, winter, and even the next summer.

We will not state a definite conclusion to the whole matter, but feel safe in saying that two or three pounds of grain mixture rich in such feeds as bran, oil meal or cottonseed meal, used in connection with pasture will in the long run pay for itself in increased milk flow very nearly as well as will the same amount of feed given in the winter. At the same time, the increased richness of the droppings, due to such feeding, will greatly increase soil fertility.

On June pastures there is less need for grain than at any other season of the year. But as the grass becomes less luxuriant and the milk flow commences on its big annual drop it is wise to consider grain feeding on pastures. —Wallace's Farmer—

New Kansas Laws.

The officers of Cherokee county have received a copy of the Kansas session laws of 1911. The copy embraces 346 chapters. Deputy County Attorney Schreiner has been interested in looking through the new statutes.

"There are three laws in the book that especially will interest three classes of men," he said. "That most interesting to the lawyers is the one making wife desertion a felony. This will have a strong tendency to put a stop to wife desertion. To my mind it is one of the best laws in the book."

"The civic lawyers are specially interested in the new law providing compensation for workmen injured in certain hazardous industries, but you just want to watch the politicians prick up their ears when they read the law governing the nomination and election of United States senators."

The new senatorial law provides that a candidate for the state legislature—representative or senator—must do one of three things when filing his nomination papers, sign his name to an agreement to vote for the candidate for senator receiving the highest number of votes at the primary preceding a senatorial election, sign a statement that he will not be governed by the people's choice, or decline to sign anything. If he signs a statement that he will vote for the candidate receiving the highest number of the people's votes, be he Democrat or Republican, he is bound only in honor to do so.

"The law places our prospective legislators in a awful boat," said Mr. Schreiner. "So many of our politicians have their ears to the grass roots, they will be afraid to sign their names saying they would not be bound by the popular choice; then they'll be afraid not to say anything, and they will dislike to say they will vote for the popular choice when he might be of another party."

A large number of the new statutes became effective upon publication in the official state paper, while others were not effective until the printing of the entire volume.

Put Quietus on Him.

Two men boarded at a certain hotel. One of them worked all the time. The other fellow just sat around. He wore good clothes and paid his board, however. One day the man who worked asked the other fellow:

"Say, I have noticed you here for the last two or three years; I have never seen you do a lick of work, yet you have money and pay your bills; you also go well dressed; how do you do it?"

Here is the reply and we will leave it to you if it isn't a hot one:

"Well, sir, I will tell you. One-half of my time I put in attending to my own business; the other half I put in letting other people's business alone."

"Uh-huh," said the other fellow. He began to see light, you know.

But we are all too prone to meddle in the other fellow's business. We would all be better off if we would cut a lot of meddling out.

Don't you know, good people of Cherokee county, that the people of this county measure up in morality with the people of any section of the country? How do you like Mr. Stubbs and the immortal Dawson to tell you that the people of Cherokee county are a set of outlaws? Just think for a minute what effect it has to send out such reports all over the civilized world.

Attorney General Dawson has joined the ranks of common liars, who send out reports that the people of Cherokee county are a set of outlaws. You remember, do you not, that Cherokee county went against Stubbs in the last election? Well, he is going to get even if he can. But you should remember, too, that Mr. Stubbs is going to be around next fall asking you to give him your votes in the primary, so that he may be sent to the United States senate? Are you going to help him out?

Why don't you take this paper?
